CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.

Fraudulent Imitation of

HOSTETTER'S

STOMACH BITTERS.

We warn the Public against a gang of scoundrels who are engaged in counterfeiting HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS. These villains, who subsist by pirating, have exhibited a cunning equal to their rascality by selecting this most popular STOMACH BITTERS. Dealers from whom better things might have been expected have in some instances condescended to imitate the original product of Hostetter in the plainer.

On the principle that the receiver is as culpable as the thief, and that the passer of spurious money is as criminal as the forger, the makers and vendors of COUNTERFEIT HOSTETTER'S BITTERS stand on the same MORAL level. The great reputation acquired by the BITTERS as a cure for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaints, &c., &c., has disengaged the Stomach and Bowels, has tempted a host of sharks, who hope to profit by their theft.

North British Review--May.

The New Westminster Review was one of the first which applauded and drew general attention to a modern theological work called 'Essays and Reviews,' a volume which has created not only a sensation among the religious public in England, and among English sceptics, but agitates to its centre the whole of the civilized world. The daring Essayists, when they came forward with the apparent view of undermining that faith of which they professed to be the champions, seem to have anticipated in some measure the consequences which would attend that act, for they demanded a hearing; and while inviting criticism, deprecated denunciation. It would be almost impossible to find time to read the mere catalogue of essays, sermons, reviews, and fugitive pamphlets, entire or to be continued in monthly and quarterly parts, which constitute the replies to the volume in question. Two volumes claim a preference however, and these "Aids to Faith" form the subject matter of the opening paper in the North British Review for May, 1862. The one by several writers is edited by the newly appointed Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, who rose to fame as the learned Master of Queen's College, Oxford, the other written by many if not entirely by members of the University of Oxford, is edited by the Bishop of the diocese, well known as the son of William Wilberforce, a popular preacher, and whether within the House of Lords or without its doors, a most attractive speaker.

We have no intention of discussing the 'Essays and Reviews,' but would ask for the article in the North British Review, entitled "The Church of England--Respondent," a careful reading. There is a good deal of truth in the following passage, which we quote as illustrative of the views held by those who view the subject from a broad and nonsectarian point of view: "Of no avail whatever would it be to bring forward just now a new 'Philosophy of the Universe.' Of no avail would it be to resort to captions and conjectural criticism in detail, whilst the mass and strength of the argument is untouched. It would not now reach the English understanding to sweep the skies in search of metaphysical nebulae, assumed to contradict our Theism, and therefore to preclude our Christianity; nor would it touch our English mind to apply the microscope to worm holes in manuscripts, while voluminous cumulative documents remain as they were—valid and conclusive, in proof of conspicuous facts. Let Germany just now be put out of view, and England only be kept in sight. Then if you say that the argument concerning the origin of Christianity is still open to doubt, you must make good such an averment as this by choosing your position somewhere upon ground that has been well mapped out in the course of the last hundred years, and across which hard beaten roads have been laid down. The history of this argument, and its conditions at this time, are perfectly well understood by educated men. The time therefore has gone by for listening to loosely compacted and endless argumentation, partly sentimental—or as it is called aesthetic—partly transcendental, partly critical: but which in the upshot of it, is carefully evasive of any conclusion. The Christian argument is now ripe for logical determination, and it must have it—and must have it in England. Germany may be left to dream itself away at ease midway between premises and conclusions; for the national mind with all its excellent qualities, is inconsequential. But if the time should come (may it never come!) when educated young men in this country shall appear to have lapsed into any such disjointed condition—listlessly granting the date and then drawing back from the inference—the English mind will have lost its tone and England will have fallen from her place in front of the array of nations." There is something about the whole article intensely British; the style of argumentation is cool, calm, and dignified, and it will have weight with men disgusted by the brilliant but insulting and triumphant denunciation of the Quarterly reviewers.

We turn to the "Geographical changes in Scotland in Historic times." The British Isles have undergone a conversion and this irrespective either of man or his doings. Nearly two thousand years have rolled away since the Roman eagle gleamed in the forests of Caledonia, and Agricola crossed the Forth to find in the Grampians, armed with targets and large blunt-pointed swords, a fierce and warlike foe. The dense forests of Scotland are matters of tradition, and we can only lose ourselves in them in an imaginary way in venerable records, whose value doubtless increases in a rate proportionate to their antiquity and the general mustiness of their condition. The ashes of great trees still exist, partially preserved in the depths of the Scottish peat-masses, the oak lording it over the Scotch fir and other trees, until the commencement of the fourteenth century. Scotland has been upheaved at least twenty feet within the space of two thousand years by slow and gradual movement, and the old shore can be traced as well as the new with as much certainty, indeed, as if the waves had only left it yesterday, and we could still gather from its surface the sea-weed and shells cast up by the last storm. Beneath this ancient beach are deposited canoes, stone-hatchets, harpoons, pottery, anchors, boat-hooks, and other relics of the former presence of man."

So is the coast of Sweden slowly rising at this moment above the North Sea and the Baltic. The island of Santa Maria, off the Chili coast, rose during the great earthquake of Feb. 20th, 1836, from 6 to 10 feet in a few hours. Here the sea has been liberal, and there it has encroached, carrying everything before it, forming new islands, scarping the Shetland coast into rugged, fantastic cliffs, and piercing them with immense perforations. "Let a man look at the facts as he will, he cannot discover in the past history of the world any results which agencies still in operation may not accomplish, provided only he will allow them enough for the operation. He cannot engage in a task more healthful, both for mind and body, than in thus comparing the phenomena of the existing time with those of former periods; dove-tailing the present with the past, learning in this way, step by step, as a child would learn it, the unity of nature, and casting an eye forward with no fear or foreboding to the centuries that have still to rise."

There has been such a run upon Homer by critics and translators of late years, including Mr. Matthew Arnold, the poet, and Mr. Newman, the critic, that we will give the noble bard a moment's peace, leaving the question of "Lunacy Legislation" to be determined by Samuel Warren, and the doctors, the duty of lawyers and doctors consisting invariably in disagreeing on every possible and impossible subject. We regret that lack of space forbids our touching at the present moment on the "Astrology of the Ancients," and an interesting paper on our Colonial Empire, which advocates the retention of the British Colonies by Great Britain, not on account of their commercial value—for they add to home taxation—or even their political value—which is reducible in ultimate analysis to the false appearance of power and grandeur it conveys—but "on the plea of duty alone—duty to our own descendants and compatriots—duty to subject races—duty to humanity at large."

It was the custom for medical men to attend the funerals in many parts of Great Britain until the close of the last century. The following circumstance caused it to be discontinued: In Cork, Dr. Longfield, then an eminent physician, was as usual attending the funeral of one of his patients, going to be interred at Christ Church. As the mournful cortège passed by the Exchange, a witty cobbler named Bounce, whose habitation was in this locality, suddenly popped his head out of his stall and addressed the doctor: "Fine morning, doctor. I perceive you are carrying home your work." Medical men have not since attended funerals in that city. It is usual, in some of the towns in Ireland, for the apothecaries as well as the doctors to attend, wearing scarfs and hatsbands of white linen tied with black or white lute-string, according as the deceased may have been married or not.

ANCIENT REMAINS.—A story is being circulated of a wonderful discovery in a small valley surrounded by deserts, somewhere beyond and northeast of the East Walker. It is said that large quantities of broken pottery of a strange pattern strew the valley and that crumbling remains of furnaces are numerous; also that the lines of walls of a number of large buildings are plainly traceable. Not satisfied with all these wonderful things, the discoverers of this wonderful valley dug among the ruins till they brought to light a number of earthen jars or vases filled with gold and silver coins bearing strange devices and of a square and oblong shape. The hills in the neighborhood are said to be full of shafts and tunnels, while along their sides are walls and excavations marking the course of roads.—Washoe paper.

THE BRITISH COLONIST

Tuesday Morning, August 5, 1862.

Immigration Board Meeting.

A meeting of citizens convened yesterday in Smith's building on Government street, for the purpose of taking steps for the formation of an Immigrant Board, which should have for its object the furtherance of the interests of new comers, no matter from what quarter of the world they may chance to hail. The meeting commenced, as all Victoria meetings do, half an hour later than the time set. The hour fixed was three o'clock, but a precious half hour had slipped profitlessly away before any movement was made towards effecting an organization. Finally a gentleman arose and moved that Mr. Sprout take the chair. The motion was heartily seconded and as heartily carried, and Mr. H. Courtney was invited to act as Secretary for the occasion.

Mr. Sprout opened the subject to the meeting and described clearly and briefly the object had in view when the call for the assemblage was issued, which was the assistance of immigrants arriving in the Colony without means with which to assist themselves, or friends on whose judgment they could rely for advice. The Cowichan scheme of Mr. Cary's Mr. Sprout believed was very good so far as it went; but it would have been better if it had come earlier, and in consequence of the dilatoriness of Government the Colony might yet have to pay largely to bring back the very immigrants whom it is now allowing to leave its shores for their homes. It was probably unavoidable at present to make any very extraordinary exertions towards attracting a large population hitherward; but the Colony must look after those already here, and those now on the way. In Canada there were three departments charged to look after immigrants. The first was the Agricultural Department, whose duty it was to collect statistics and other information of value to immigrants. The second was the Land Department, with agencies throughout the Provinces, which pointed out the farming land to the strangers. The Immigration Office, located at Quebec, was the third and the most important department of all. Connected with it is a chief agent, who receives a salary, and a head tax was at first collected from immigrants to pay the expenses of the offices; but now the expenses of the offices are set down in the Civil List and are met by the Colonial Government. A Canadian commission reported two years ago in favor of the abolition of the head tax; asked for a suitable landing place for immigrants, and the establishment of offices at different points, which could communicate with the Immigration Board at Quebec. Of all the officers of this Department only the chief agent is paid. The American immigrant system, Mr. Sprout deemed the best in the world, and it had contributed more to place the United States in the position which it lately occupied than any other cause. Depend upon it, a large immigration was on its way, and it was the duty of us all to induce as many as possible to settle here; "and it is the duty," concluded Mr. S., "of this meeting to see what can be done."

Mr. Bishop left England in March last and pitched right and left into Donald Fraser, the correspondent of the London Times for alleged misstatements when writing to that journal. Those statements Mr. Bishop believed had brought many a poor fellow to this country who, had they never been made, would have remained at home. The glowing stories told by Mr. Fraser about the gold diggings, Mr. B. would not attempt to controvert.

"We did not adopt the immigration systems of Canada, Australia, or New Zealand?" They had been found to work well there; try them here. Put broken men on the land instead of sending them to wander over the country alone. Let Government come forward and do something, and let patriotic individuals do likewise. One citizen had offered to set a number at work to-day, and he wanted to see others do the same. It was full late to take the present step, but we must provide for those coming in ships from England before another delusive bait is held out to induce others to follow, or there would be distress.

Archdeacon Wright took up the cudgels for the absent correspondent of the Times, and repelled the statement made by Mr. Bishop that people had been deluded into coming hither, in the name of the government who were seen there practised for.

"We did not adopt the immigration systems of Canada, Australia, or New Zealand?" They had been found to work well there; try them here. Put broken men on the land instead of sending them to wander over the country alone. Let Government come forward and do something, and let patriotic individuals do likewise. One citizen had offered to set a number at work to-day, and he wanted to see others do the same. It was full late to take the present step, but we must provide for those coming in ships from England before another delusive bait is held out to induce others to follow, or there would be distress.

Archdeacon Wright moved that both gentlemen were right. He knew one young man, the son of a gentleman, who had gone to work in the woods before going to British Columbia, so that he might get accustomed to hard work; and he had known another young man who came to him and demanded that he should be sent home at the expense of the Colony.

Mr. Waddington asked if the objects of the meeting were to be extended to British Columbia?

The Chairman replied no; that they were confined to Island.

Archdeacon Wright moved that a committee be appointed to carry out the objects contained in the fifth resolution.

Mr. Waddington seconded, and took occasion to edge in a few good words in behalf of the Bute Inlet route, which, he declared, was perfectly level, and that in another month goods would be packed over it to Cariboo. "Arrangements are making with the packers on Fraser River," said Mr. Waddington, "to move to the Bute Inlet road at once, and any person will soon be able to walk to Cariboo in one week from the head of the Inlet over a road that (use the words of a friend) 'an old woman can walk over.' [Great applause.]

The resolution was carried and the Chairman appointed Messrs. Waddington, Burnaby, A. C. Anderson, Criddle, Cary, McKenzie, Lewis and Sprout, as the Committee.

Bishop Demers was proposed as a member of the Committee, but declined on account of pressing church duties.

Mr. Felix O'Byrnes next proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, which was carried, and the meeting adjourned sine die.

WRONG IN THEIR FIGURES.—A Mr. Brown writes to the Toronto Leader that New Westminster is 200 miles northwest of Victoria. The distance is about 60 miles. But he has come about as near the truth as most correspondents, when they attempt to scribble on matters of which they know nothing. Another writer to a Canadian paper says there are several hundred thousand fierce Indians at Cariboo, when in reality it would be an extremely difficult matter to find 200.

GOLD BARS sell now at one and one and a quarter per cent. discount. A year ago, three and a half and four per cent. was the ruling rate in this market, and we knew last fall many instances where as high as five per cent. discount was paid—indeed, that was the ruling rate for the month of October. Those were profitable days for the fortunate possessors of spare cash.

A REGULAR THING.—Wells, Fargo & Co now send an armed escort, preceded by a Pickett-guard of one, from the office to Esquimalt on each steamer day, to guard the treasure while on its way to the steamer. Suitable uniforms for the escort have been ordered.

THROWN FROM HORSES.—Yesterday a marine and a tar attempted to race through Wharf and Yates street, and at the foot of the latter thoroughfare were both thrown, by the shying of the animals which they bestrode, and injured. They received severe bruises, but fortunately escaped with whole limbs.

TREASURE.—The Sierra Nevada carried away about $50,000 in treasure yesterday—nearly all coin. The banking establishments only shipped 35,000, and in private hands there were about $15,000.

THE NEW HOTEL.—The foundation stones for the large brick hotel on View street, near Broad, have been drawn to the site and the work of laying them commenced yesterday.

A CHANGE.—The gunboat Grappler will be sent to Cowichan and Comox with the Government expedition, and the Devastation will be dispatched to Stickeen River.

SETTLED.—The Parson family have settled all disputes by agreeing to a mutual separation of the man and wife.

TO THE STEAMER OTTER.—The steamer Otter will leave this morning for Stickeen River.

DUE.—The schooner North Star, from Stickeen is fully due here.

A SMALL SLOOP.—A small sloop arrived from Stickeen yesterday morning but brought no later news.

TO THE SIERRA NEVADA.—The Sierra Nevada had over 500 tons of freight aboard for Portland, Oregon.

YOU BET.—You Bet is the name of a flourishing little town lately established in California.

cedar shingles, and said that there were plenty of chances for men if they wanted to work. The resolution was carried.

Mr. Pitdwell introduced the third resolution—"That steps should be taken at once with the object of encouraging and assisting the immigrants who may arrive here." Mr. Pitdwell denied that Vancouver Island did not offer as great inducements to settlers as other Provinces. He had lived 25 years in the Provinces—had watched them grow and knew the difficult row which the farmers had to hoe to acquire a competency. Many of the sons of Canadian farmers who had come hither and gone away, saying that there was no chance, had no idea of what their fathers had gone through. In Canada, within 100 miles of Toronto, land was worth £1 and £2 an acre;—here it was sold for $1 an acre and need not be paid for in four years. [hear] Mr. Pitdwell continued at some length to dilate upon the superior resources of these Colonies over many others, and was finally brought up by Mr. Alston.—Remember, Mr. Pitdwell, that "life is short," and that it is getting late.

Mr. Pitdwell continued for a few minutes and then sat down.

Mr. Siffken seconded the resolution and it was carried.

Mr. A. C. Anderson offered the fourth resolution—"That so important an object should be furthered by a well-considered action on the part of the Legislature."

Dr. Verney was disposed to think that this Government had contributed through its statements to the Home Government to bring many persons here, and believing therefore that they had some claim on the Government, seconded the resolution, which was carried.

Mr. Criddle felt a great deal of satisfaction in moving—"That pending such action on the part of the Legislature, some provision should be made for the purpose of affording means of communication between employers of labor and those seeking employment; also, for the purpose of affording useful general information to immigrants."

Mr. Lumley Franklin seconded the resolution, which was carried.

Mr. Bishop wanted a list made out of those citizens who would give employment to "broken" men, and took occasion to fire a broad-side at the remarks of the "gentleman" [Lieut. Verney] concerning the man with the eleven sisters and the man with the ring. He [Mr. Bishop] was a Cornishman, and he felt hurt by the remarks which had fallen from the gallant gentleman's lips. "At Panama," said Mr. Bishop, "I knew a young man who had fallen sick, and by the time he reached California he had parted with everything he owned in the world save a gold ring. That ring was a pledge of affection, and who could blame him if he starved before he would give it up?" [Applause.] Another young man whom I knew parted with everything save a Bible,—that was the gift of a fond sister, and he would have lost his life rather than let it go. [Applause.] If the men whom the gentleman knew could not row a boat and wore gold rings, spoke French, and had been brought up with eleven sisters, it was no sign that they were poor immigrants. [Applause.] Let his gallant friend leave his vessel and put himself in a drug store, and see what a fist he would make of it. [Laughter.] Mr. Bishop concluded by saying that the land near Victoria was worth nothing.

Lieut. Verney rose to apologize to Mr. Bishop, and understood that that gentleman had taken umbrage at his remarks. He would not make light of any man's feelings. [Hear, hear.]

Mr. Magistrate Pemberton held that both gentlemen were right. He knew one young man, the son of a gentleman, who had gone to work in the woods before going to British Columbia, so that he might get accustomed to hard work; and he had known another young man who came to him and demanded that he should be sent home at the expense of the Colony.

Mr. Waddington asked if the objects of the meeting were to be extended to British Columbia?

The Chairman replied no; that they were confined to Island.

Archdeacon Wright moved that a committee be appointed to carry out the objects contained in the fifth resolution.

A fine fellow, named Douglas, was reported to me by his friends as down with it on the Reserve. The disease was of the confluent form, accompanied with delirium. I am afraid that during the day he exposed himself to the outer air; certain it is that the evening of the same day I visited him closed in upon his death. Ever since I have been urging the Indians to adopt every precaution to prevent the spread of the infection.

Yesterday I vaccinated what few were left without this antidote to the malaria, appointed a sanitary committee to carry out certain preventative measures, and told them that if they set to work to help themselves, other people would gladly co-operate.
